

VIVIANE NOLL LOUZADA FLORES, DVM, Ph.D. student

She is Ph.D. student in “Animal Health and Zoonosis” at the Department of Veterinary Medicine of the University of Bari (2021-2024). She is graduated in Biotechnology at Federal University of Rio Grande do Sul (UFRGS) and performed a masters in Parasitology in the Federal University of Santa Catarina (UFSC). Viviane is in the scientific world since her graduation, being integrated several research groups such as Animal Genetics, Vegetal Genetics, Structural and Functional Genomics, Genetics Therapies, Molecular Evolution and Oxidative Stress studies. After the graduation, she worked in an animal health multinational enterprise as laboratory assistant for 2 years before starting the masters. Her area of interest is the filarial nematode diseases of dogs, and she is currently working on different aspects of canine dirofilarioses approaching basic and applied science.